Federal bankruptcy law helps individuals get a handle on their debt by allowing them to request a complete liquidation under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code and/or a repayment plan under Chapter 13.

Bankruptcy under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code is often referred to as liquidation bankruptcy or a "straight bankruptcy. Under Chapter 7, a Bankruptcy Court can relieve a debtor of the responsibility to pay most of his or her debts but still allow the debtor to keep much of his or her property.

Bankruptcy under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code is sometimes referred to as a wage earner plan. Under Chapter 13, a Bankruptcy Court can help a debtor reorganize his debts and pay them off over time. Under Chapter 13, a debtor typically keeps all of his or her property.
